

THE SEA IS UNFORGIVING AND THE FIVE BILLIONAIRES DIED

Sadly the five billionaires who had embarked on a 13,000 foot journey deep in the Pacific Ocean to witness the wreckage of the Titanic ship are no more. The area is within the Bermuda triangle, a very risky place due to magnetic forces and it said the missing submersible which the five were on board exploded. This comes after four days of frantic search and rescue mission

$35 million each to go and see. When the ship sunk only 1500 passengers on board were rescued mostly on the first-class deck. The rest of the passengers and the crew went down with the vessel. It took 73 years for the wreckage to be located. That means, from 1912 the first sight of the remains of the ship was done in 1985. It took that long because of the limitations of technology — — — — mounted by the US Coast Guard, the Canadian Navy and the Ocean Gate company crew. Nothing was forthcoming until the French sent what would actually solve the puzzle of the missing sub and its occupants. Amid fears of oxygen running out, France sent a robot that can dive to 20,000 feet (6,000 metres) underwater. It's that thing that looks like a generator, yellow in colour. The unmanned robot, called Victor 6000, can dive deeper than — — — — other equipment now at the site in the North Atlantic and has arms that can be remotely controlled to cut cables or perform other maneuvers to release a stuck vessel. The Titanic ship sunk on April 14, 1912. The magnificent luxury ship, the biggest to be built that time, had 2,200 passengers and 900 crew members. It torpedoed 700km off the coast of Newfoundland, Canada. The ship's wreckage is resting some 3,800 metres on the floor of the Atlantic. And that is what the billionaires paid

— — — — then. Because during that time the magical Victor 6000 had not been born. And as though history repeats itself, 112 years later on the same spot, in a vessel with the same name, a tragic loss of life occurs. Victor has spotted and relayed information of the debris of the sub. It hasn't spotted anything looking like a human being yet. May their soul rest in peace

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Did you know that former American 54th House Speaker Paul Ryan, (October 2015-January, 2019, (Republican), slept in his office throughout his tenure? Before he was elected Speaker, Paul was a Congressman representing a congressional District in Wisconsin. In all those years that he served in Washington DC, he was sleeping on an Air Mattress in his office floor since his wife and kids were back in Wisconsin. Paul said that he could only sleep on a bed if his wife was sleeping on it or rent an apartment if his wife and kids live in it. When he was elected House Speaker, a position that comes with a Mansion, he chose not to live in it since his wife and kids did not want to move to D.C. But it's not just Paul Ryan who slept in office in D.C. Out of the 435 American Legislators (Congressmen and Senators) serving their constituents in Washington, 50 of them shower, eat, and sleep in their offices. In an Interview with the AFP News Agency, Congressman Tim Walberg from Michigan said that he's been sleeping on his office floor since he was elected in 2007. Why? He says it's a good way to save money since house rents in Washington are ridiculously high. He also had this to say: "I am not a king, a prince, or a Lord. The people who sent me here (masses) are the people I serve. And I don't ever want to get to a point where I believe that, because I'm here, I'm better than them." Now, 200 legislators also share apartments. You got it right. Three to Five Senators can come together, rent one apartment, share the costs, and live together. They can also buy one car and use it to drive together to work. Yes, these are Senators and Congressmen from the largest economy in the world sleeping in their offices, sharing apartments, and cars. In America, only the Speakers of both Houses and Senior Congressional Leadership have personal security. In Nigeria every MP's first priority is a big car, a house, a personal police bodyguard. Even local assembly men/women are referred to as Honourable. Refuse to address him/her as such, hell will break loose. They live in mansion and own not less than 2 cars and you wonder why we are, as we are, as a dysfunctional country? What the people of Nigeria need is a referendum to end this evil contraption called presidential system and an emergence of a new constitution that address our peculiarities. We CAN NOT be silent about it. He that is silent in the days of the adversity of the oppressed, is more guilty and has taken the side of the oppressor. Let's create more awareness.
