NIGERIA MILITARY TAKES THE BATTLE TO THE ENCLAVE OF TERRORISTS

The Nigerian Military has stepped up in its fight against the bandits and terrorists by taking the battle straight to their doorstep. This followed the declaration by the Security Chiefs who pledge to change their tactics in dealing with the insurgency war. This has been the expectation of many Nigerians who in time past can vouch for the Military by virtue of the exploits in peace keeping operations and crisis resolution across Africa and the sub region. The new strategy now is to go for the jugulars and smoke out the terrorists from wherever they are hiding. In recent times the Military have been pounding the identified locations of the enemy while the ground troops move in to finish the job. We have seen the destructions of their hideout and killings of scores of their leaders. The Military more than ever before is daily penetrating the camps of the terrorists, decimating them and releasing many captives and sanity is being restored to many communities and towns.

It is expected that this intra and inter synergy between the Military and other security must be sustained to further reinforce the success of this asymmetrical fight and warfare with these enemies of Nigeria as the nation look forward to the 2023 elections. Nigerians on their own part should support the Military by volunteering information on the activities of these bandits to the appropriate authorities. Our cover story is Inside Nigeria's War against the Terrorists. We bring you details of the battle so far and how the Nigeria Military has taken the upper hand to crush the enemies. All hands are still on deck as the battle is yet to be over. God's willing the battle will soon be over and Nigeria will be better for it. We join millions of Nigerians to say a big Kudos to the Military.

Any time from now the final whistle for the beginning of political party's campaign will be blown by INEC and political activities will kick off in full earnest. Nigerians are looking forward to issue based campaigns that will let the citizens know what the various office seekers can do to take the country out of the woods. Nigerians want a paradigm change from a degenerating country to a more stable economy. Nigerians are interested in candidates who can help initiate and promote policies that will engender good governance, peace and development. Nigerians want to see the leaders who believe in the future and greatness of Nigeria. Nigerians are interested in a leader who has integrity, character and wisdom to tackle the myriads of social, economic and political problems plaguing our nation. Nigerians are interested in leaders who are passionate about education and the greatness of our future generation. The campaigns and debates should not be centered on personalities, party, religious or ethnic colorations. It should be all about competence and the ability to deliver the goodies to Nigerians. Nigerians are no longer gullible and are not ready to listen to jesters and comedians who parade themselves as spokesmen of Presidential Candidates. Let those who aspire to lead us come out and tell us how they intend to save Nigerians from this ship that is already sinking. Nigerians are not interested in voting for Party this time around but for credible individuals who can fix the country and restore her image and glory among the comity of nations.
